GAZETTE NOTICE No. 695

THE INDUSTRIAL COURT

CAUSE No. 68 OF 1990

Parties:

Amalgamated Union of Kenya Metal Workers and
Associated Vehicles Assemblers Limited

Issue in dispute:

Refusal to place employees on permanent employment.

THE Amalgamated Union of Kenya Metal Workers shall hereinafter be referred to as the claimants and the Associated Vehicles Assemblers Limited shall hereinafter be referred to as the respondents.

2. The parties were heard in Nairobi on 17th October, and 2nd November, 1990, respectively. The parties relied on their written and verbal submissions.

AWARD

3. The Notification of Dispute Form "A" dated 10th April, 1990, duly signed by the parties was received by the court on 25th May, 1990, together with the statutory certificate signed by the Labour Commissioner.

The respondents are members of the Kenya Vehicle Assemblers Association with whom the claimants entered into a recognition agreement in 1975. Since then the parties have negotiated and concluded several collective agreements covering terms and conditions of employees of the member companies of the said association.

This dispute arose in 1985 when it is alleged that the respondents entered into contract employment with individual job seekers. The contract employment was to last six months and was renewable on six monthly basis. As a result, 279 workers out of a total of 417 labour force were employed and placed on six months employment contract.

The claimants submitted that in an attempt to settle the matter a joint meeting was held between the parties in November 1985. The parties resolved that contract employees should be gradually absorbed into permanent employment within a period of six months. However, by October 1986 the contract employees had not been placed on permanent terms of service. Thus the claimants on 3rd November, 1986, were prompted to call for another joint meeting. The meeting was accordingly held on 7th November, 1986, and the parties once again agreed on how the dispute could be resolved.

They went on to state that the respondents did not implement the parties' agreement of 7th November, 1986. Consequently on 2nd December, 1986, the dispute was reported to the Minister for Labour. Subsequently, a conciliator was appointed to assist the parties in reaching a settlement in the matter. However, there was no settlement reached and the matter is now before the court for further consideration.

The claimants submitted that the parties recognition and collective agreements have no provision for contract employment. Secondly, the recognition agreement clause 2 (a) between the parties gives the claimants the sole right to represent the employees of the association on all matters either collectively or individually.

The claimants referred the court to various labour laws which the respondents were accused of violating or applying wrongly to suit their own interests. The claimants firstly quoted the following sections of the Employment Act, Cap. 226, sections 11, 14 (1), 19 and 58 respectively. The claimants argued that the sections referred to hereinabove are explicit and the respondents should not be allowed to substitute them with other meanings such as contract employment other than the intended purposes. The claimants further stated that the workers on contract employment are occupationally disadvantaged in that they cannot join savings and credit co-operative societies. The employees prospects for future employment and job security with the respondents is uncertain.

The claimants also cited the Wages Council Order for the Motor Engineering Industry namely Legal Notice No. 298 of 14th August, 1987, and emphasized that there is no provision for contract employment therein. The claimants explained that in the Employment Act, Cap. 226, and the Wages Council Order for the Motor Industry there are only two legal categories of employment. These were cited as: permanent and casual employment respectively. The claimants stressed that these two categories of employees are the only ones existing in the Kenya labour laws. Consequently, the workers who are subject of this dispute are for all practical purposes permanent employees.

The claimants concluded their submissions by saying that the respondents are the largest assembly plant in Kenya compared to the Leyland and the General Motors. The claimants supported their submissions by saying that 8,031 units were assembled by the respondent in the year 1985 alone. As a result, the respondents make more profits and should employ more permanent employees. The claimants added that the respondents' prayer in this dispute would be disastrous because other employers would follow suit and start employing workers on contract terms of employment.

They alleged that, the respondents in placing majority of their employees on contract terms had acted contrary to the established machinery. The claimants urged the court to find that, the respondents are using an unfair labour practice and are out to set a bad precedent in the labour market. They prayed the court to award that the employees on contract terms of employment be placed on permanent terms of service unconditionally.

The respondents submitted that their business is derived from the assembly of vehicles from completely knocked down (C.D.K.) components, which are supplied by the client companies. Consequently, neither the respondents nor their customers have any direct control over the level of licences issued for the importation of these kits. The kits levels usually vary both suddenly and substantially from a range of 300 to 1,000 vehicles per month. Consequently, the production capacity is dependent on the availability of importation licences as well as market forces.

The respondents stressed that in view of the above circumstances, it is not economically practicable to offer all the employees permanent work all the year round. The respondents further argued that any attempt to place all employees on permanent terms of employment would jeopardize the viability of their company and imperil job opportunities for all the employees. The respondents told the court that in 1982 a substantial portion of the workforce was regrettably retired due to severe reduction in C.D.K. licence approvals.

The respondents continued to emphasize that since 1982 the production has continued to suffer from an erratic supply of C.D.K. licences. As a result, it is very difficult to employ everybody on permanent terms. However, it was resolved that instead of engaging casual employees in accordance with the Employment Act, Cap. 226, it was more secure to hire workers on six months employment contracts renewable by further six months. This way labour was to be seasonally protected from market fluctuations and C.D.K. licence approvals. Secondly, when the situation demands the contract employees are absorbed into the permanent terms on merit basis.

The respondents gave figures of contract employees offered permanent employment in the last three years as follows:

1986	1987/88	Total No.
34 workers	20 workers	54 workers.

The respondents stated that this trend had to be discontinued in 1987 arising from two factors. Firstly, the company had lost 20 per cent of business from the D.T. Dobie to the Leyland Vehicle Assemblers. Secondly, arising from market inelasticity and non-availability of C.D.K. kits employees had to be sent on paid leave in January, April and July/August 1990, respectively. The respondents concluded by saying that by raising up this matter the claimants were in fact questioning the respondents' good intentions in preferring contract employment to casual labour. They pleaded with the court to find that their decision was the correct one and so reject the claimants' demand in total.

The issues raised in the dispute are startling if their effect and ramifications on the whole spectrum of employment in the country are carefully studied and taken into account.

The respondents are relying on the provisions of the Employment Act in keeping a substantial number of their workers on six months fixed-term contracts which at the end are either terminated or renewed for another six months. In this manner many workers have continued to work for the respondents more or less continuously for periods ranging from three to six years with the respondents retaining the right not to renew their contracts after six months.

By adopting this system the respondents are clearly avoiding having to face redundancy procedures which other employers in the country have to.

If all the employers in the country decided to do what the respondents are doing then the workers rights particularly long term continued employment and their retirement benefits will evaporate and workers' fates will hang in the balance every six months. Is this the type of situation which our legislators had in mind when enacting section 14 of the Employment Act? Surely not, as the whole spirit behind the Employment Act is to safeguard the workers' rights and to prevent their exploitation by the employers.

The court has no doubt that the respondents are taking advantage of a section of the Employment Act which strictly is not to be applied generally for employment purposes in the country. This section is to be applied only sparingly where the work is of a short duration and under exceptional circumstances.

Apart from the Employment Act there is also Regulation of Wages and Conditions of Employment Act under which wages councils for various industries are constituted. In the wages councils order for this industry (under which the respondents fall) there is no provision for contract employment but there is provision for regular and casual employees only.

As far as casual employees are concerned the court has ruled in various disputes that a worker after three months continuous service should be converted to permanent employment and the Labour Commissioner and the Federation of Kenya Employers have also issued circulars to that effect.

Furthermore in accordance with the Wages Regulations Orders, employees after three months' service qualify for the other terms and conditions of service such as leave, notice, etc., applicable to permanent employees and in essence are treated in the same manner as permanent employees even though they may be called casuals or by any other name. All this is enforceably by law.

Then there is the whole field of industries relations based on the Industrial Relations Charter and the Trade Disputes Act under which the Industrial Court has been established through whose decisions the workers enjoy security of employment in Kenya. The respondents are in a way denying workers recourse to industrial court to protect their jobs.

The respondents have pleaded that there is no guarantee of continued employment for their workers because of what boils down to shortage of foreign exchange as a result of which the issue of import licences to them for C.D.Ks. is very scarce and erratic. But then this applies to all industrial enterprises in the country including other vehicle assemblers and many an employer whenever the need arose has come and pleaded in court that they cannot sustain their level of employment because of lack of import licences for their raw materials. The respondents are not an exception in this respect. Yet there seems to be no other employer who is keeping workers in employment on six months fixed-employment contracts. Why can't the respondents do the same? It is not fair for the respondents to do that and it is an extremely undesirable practice in the labour employment sector and it should not only be vigorously discouraged but should be stopped before it spreads to the detriment of the workers in the country.

After careful consideration of all the submissions the court finds that the respondents are engaged in an unfair labour practice and they should cease it in the manner directed hereunder.

The court directs the Chief Industrial Relations Officer in the Ministry of Labour to convene a meeting of the respondents and the claimants under his chairmanship with a view to ending this practice within twelve months of the date of the court award so that after that period the respondents can be brought in line with other employers in the country—thereafter if the respondents have surplus labour they should apply for redundancy as provided for in the statute and the relevant collective agreement.
