THE INDUSTRIAL COURT
CAUSE No. 32 OF 1965

Parties:

The Kenya Distributive and Commercial Workers' Union
and
Nairobi District Retail Dairywomen's Association

Issues in dispute:

Social security—including redundancy and severance pay.

1. The issues were referred to the Industrial Court for settlement in accordance with the provisions of the Trade Disputes Act, 1965.

The parties were heard in Nairobi on 22nd September 1965.

GENERAL BACKGROUND

2. The Kenya Distributive and Commercial Workers' Union (hereinafter referred to as the Claimants), have been recognized by the Nairobi District Retail Dairywomen's Association (hereinafter referred to as the Respondents) since 1959. The Respondents represent 15 milk retailers employing collectively some 600 workers in the Nairobi area. At a conciliation meeting on 22nd July 1965, held under the auspices of the Ministry of Labour and Social Services, the Claimants proposed that as the above issues in dispute had not been agreed they should be referred to the Industrial Court. Both parties eventually signed Form "A" on 23rd August 1965.

MAIN SUBMISSIONS BY THE CLAIMANTS

3. It was stated by the Claimants that as a result of conciliation by the Ministry of Labour and Social Services, they and the Respondents had signed a Negotiated Agreement on 28th January 1965, on terms and conditions of service. Although no agreement had been reached on Social Security, Redundancy and Severance Pay at that meeting, it had been agreed that these issues could be discussed at a later date. The Claimants submitted that when they wrote to the Respondents to open discussions on these issues they were asked by the Respondents to await the Government's Scheme on Social Security. After much correspondence which produced no practical results they were driven to declare a trade dispute to the Minister for Labour and Social Services. Even the conciliation discussions which followed the acceptance of this trade dispute were a failure.

The Claimants asked the Court to award, in the case of social security, one month's pay for every year of service from the time the employees first entered employment with the Respondents and up to the date when the National Social Security Scheme took over. It was pointed out that the National Social Security Scheme would take no account of an employee's past service.

On redundancy and severance pay the Court was asked to award two weeks' pay for every year of service when an employee was declared redundant.

MAIN SUBMISSIONS BY THE RESPONDENTS

4. It was the Respondents' submission that the Claimants' first reference to terminal benefits appeared in their letter dated 6th February 1964, in which they demanded that "any employee declared redundant shall be given three months' notice and one month's salary for each year of service. A pension scheme shall be immediately introduced". A meeting on these demands took place on 31st March 1964, but was adjourned after only an hour's discussion. A further meeting took place on 14th May 1964, between them, the Federation of Kenya Employers and the Claimants when they made the following offer on redundancy—

- (a) one month's notice;
- (b) the application of the principles of the Industrial Relations Charter; and
- (c) after a qualifying period of three years, one week's pay for each year of completed service.

The Claimants, they stated, were prepared to accept (a) and (b) but countered with a demand for two weeks' pay for each year of completed service without a qualifying period. This was unacceptable to the Respondents and the Claimants had reverted to their original demand for one month's pay for each completed year of service. On pension or service gratuity, they stated that they had made it clear that they were not prepared to make any offer at that stage in view of the possibility of a national scheme. The meeting ended in deadlock.

As a result of this deadlock a letter dated 22nd May 1965, was addressed to the Minister for Labour and Social Services indicating that no agreement had been reached on this issue and on 26th May, this issue was accepted as item (g) in a trade dispute. Further meetings took place between the parties, subsequent to the appointment and without the presence of the Conciliator, but agreement had not been reached. The Conciliator convened a joint meeting for 21st January 1965, which had been largely successful. It was in the agreement resulting from that meeting that the following clause (clause 7) appeared:—

"Social Security including Redundancy and Severance Pay

In view of the impending introduction of the National Provident Fund Scheme the Union withdrew their claim on this issue. It was, however, agreed that discussions on this item could be re-opened between the parties themselves at a later date."

It was the Respondents' submission that clause 7 (above) was very clear in its intention and that the statement "The Union withdrew their claim on this issue" was unequivocal. The only point for debate was what was intended by the sentence which followed, and which made provisions for discussions to be re-opened at a later date. The Respondents stated that they were satisfied that the second sentence amounted to a proviso in the light of the impending introduction of the National Provident Fund. Clearly, it was intended that if, in the near future, provision was to be made by the Government for social security, there would not be a need to make a similar provision for social security in the negotiated agreement. However, they stated, it was plain from the Claimant's subsequent correspondence that they had realized the exploitable possibilities of a service benefit which could be quickly converted to a lump sum of money for each member. The Claimants' original approach to this problem was a correct one but totally different to the approach being made today. It was based on the premise that if the Government was prepared to make early provision for social security then it removed that obligation from the Respondents. The precise wording of the section in the negotiated agreement made it clear that the only hesitancy involved stemmed from the lack of knowledge of the Government's timetable for the introduction of a national scheme.

That the Claimants now wished to establish a scheme merely to cash in was evidenced by their letter of 27th May 1965, where they referred to the Government's intention to "start workers' investments through the existing scheme". A logical corollary to this statement was that there must be an existing scheme which was capable of being wound up. The Respondents, being a party to the Industrial Relations Charter, must accept that there was equity in the establishment of a scheme to make provision for redundant employees. They could not accept, however, that the original demand and discussions on the establishment of a pension scheme could now be interpreted in the position chosen by the Claimants.

The Court was given details of the falling profits over the years, and particular reference was made to the fact that the Respondents had made no provisions, in the past, for payment of social security. The Court was asked to take all these points into consideration when making its award.

AWARD

5. After a careful study of the evidence and submissions of the parties, the Court awards as follows:—

The Court finds that clause 7, although ambiguously worded, allows the Claimants to re-open discussions at a later date. The Court is not satisfied that the re-opening of the discussions was tied to the inauguration of the National Provident Fund Scheme. In view of the fact that no discussions have taken place between the parties the Court requires them to discuss and if possible reach an agreement on this issue. The result of their negotiations should be notified to the Court within a period of three months from the date of the award.

On the issues of redundancy and severance pay the Court awards:—

- (a) That when an employee is declared redundant he should be given one month's notice for the termination of his service and further that the principles laid down in the Industrial Relations Charter on redundancy shall apply.
- (b) That such an employee who is declared redundant shall get one week's pay for each completed year of service for the first three years of service. Thereafter ten days' pay for each completed year of service.

Given in Nairobi this 12th day of October 1965.

THE INDUSTRIAL COURT

CAUSE No. 36 OF 1965

Parties:

The Kenya Chemical Workers' Union
and

The Kenya Paint Manufacturers' Group

Issues in dispute:

The job classification dispute has not been resolved.

1. The issue in dispute was referred to the Industrial Court for settlement in accordance with the provisions of the Trade Disputes Act, 1965.

The parties were heard in Nairobi on 24th September 1965.

GENERAL BACKGROUND

2. The Kenya Paint Manufacturers' Group (hereinafter referred to as the Respondents), came into being on 15th October 1963, when the Companies of Walpamur (E.A.) Limited, Sadolins Paints (E.A.) Limited, Leylands Paints (Africa) Limited, and Kenya Paints (B.J.N.) Limited decided to act in concert in respect of their relationship with the Kenya Chemical Workers' Union (hereinafter referred to as the Claimants). Previous to this grouping the Claimants were recognized by, and were party to agreements on terms and conditions of employment signed by, each individual employer. It was on 30th September 1963, that the Claimants first referred matters of terms of service, which included the issue of grading, to the Respondents as a group.

Both parties were the parties in Cause No. 6 of 1964 and were directed in the award to get together and resolve any anomalies which existed in job classification at that time. Since that time little progress in resolving their differences over job classification was achieved. In August of 1965 workers went on strike. The matter was resolved by the Ministry of Labour and Social Services when both parties agreed to refer the above issue to the Industrial Court.

MAIN SUBMISSIONS BY THE CLAIMANTS

3. The Claimants placed before the Court papers setting down their proposed job classifications (grading system) which they stated were more appropriate for employees in the industry than the six-grade system proposed by the Respondents. They also submitted papers showing job classifications which had been agreed and signed with individual paint manufacturers before the formation of the Respondents' group.

The Claimants state that it had been completely impossible for them to accept the job classification as proposed, for the first time, by the Respondents, on 11th February 1965, bearing in mind the interests of workers in relation to the jobs they were carrying out in the paint industry. As no agreement had been reached since then, they requested that the Court should call in an expert to work out job titles, or failing this, visit the factories and make its own assessment. They argued that some of the titles used by the Respondents were completely unnecessary and did not correspond with the gradings which they had signed with some of the Respondents' members three years back. If the Respondents could not be progressive then each member of the Respondents should have their own grades and classifications.

They felt very strongly that the Respondents were out to understate the workers to the extent of confusing the job which they were doing. This move was deliberate and had a bad motive and unless revised immediately it could discourage workers from contributing fully to the industry as it appeared that there would be no promotion for the process workers at all.

The Claimants hoped that the Court would resolve the differences existing between the parties and why the Respondents had created new job titles on other jobs and pursued the system of down grading of jobs done mainly by Africans. They stated that they were convinced that the Court would realize the interest the workers had in grading and classification of jobs as the only means of promotion for such process workers.

MAIN SUBMISSIONS BY THE RESPONDENTS

4. The Respondents submitted that the question posed to the Court by the terms of reference was why had this particular dispute not been resolved in view of the fact that the Court's award was made in October 1964? Clearly the Court would be confronted with two different replies to that question. On their part they maintained that every effort had been made to get anomalies established so that they could be considered and resolved by joint negotiation. Meetings had been proposed on two separate occasions which had produced no profitable response from the Claimants. The Claimants, it was stated, had made it clear that they wanted their own proposals for a wage structure based on five grades with 44 job titles accepted. The Claimants had chosen to disregard the fact that the Respondents in reaching their own decisions on the question of grading had accepted the necessity for members to shoulder heavy financial burdens in the interests of uniformity. It was also important to remember that the Respondents had given an undertaking that no employee would suffer financially as a result of grading. For that reason it had not been possible to take unilateral and arbitrary action to implement their views on a uniform wage structure. In submitting to the Claimants a consolidated document on terms and conditions of service, it was their view that they had acted in the best interests of industrial relations and had provided the Claimants with an opportunity to dissect in detail their proposals.

The categories proposed in their draft memorandum had much in common with the categories set out in their submission to the Industrial Court and the Claimants should have had no difficulty in replying to them, either verbally or in writing, stating precise objections, etc. This had not been the case. Since the correspondence was commenced the Claimants' attitude had been an intransigent unwillingness to do anything other than insist on their own grading system.

It was the Respondents' view that the Claimants' attitude conflicted with the wishes of the Court. The majority of their employees were already paid in accordance with the six grades and it was the integration of the two members with five grades which involved substantial additional expenditure. That they were willing to pay this price to rectify the situation created by the Claimants' absence of policy must stand to their credit before the Court. This lack of policy or coherence could be well established by examining the progress of the Claimants' negotiation with the Respondents' members on a wage structure. The Claimants' absence of policy was deliberate as their habit of proliferating job titles and making various permutations with gradings was purely for the purpose of securing wage enhancement. In their memoranda to the Industrial Court in Cause No. 6 of 1964, they had demanded a wage structure of five grades—Sh. 350; Sh. 550; Sh. 650; Sh. 750 and Sh. 950. Grade I contained 10 job titles; Grade II—eight titles; Grade III—14 titles; Grade IV—nine titles and Grade V—three titles—a total of 44. The Respondents submitted that there were only four established ways of job evaluation ("Wages and Salaries" by Genders and Urwin)—Job Rating, Job Classification, Points Rating and Factor Comparison. The Court must needs be satisfied that one of these methods had been used before the Claimants' case could be established. In the original establishment of the three separate wage structures job titles evolved (as had been the custom in Kenya) and so long as the titles were recognized and carried a wage related to the current pattern, then the employer was not antagonistic to the Claimants' proposals. However, when the Claimants' demands were rationalization, uniformity, equality of wages, etc., then an obligation arose to show some logical reason for breaking down what, with the Claimants' initiative, had been set up. Then it became necessary to take an objective look at the history of the situation. Firstly, Leyland Paints recognized the Claimants in 1962 and in September established a five-grade 18-job wage structure. In December 1962, Kenya Paints (B.J.N.) Limited, signed an agreement on terms and conditions of service and established a six-grade 23-job wage structure; this was the largest member company and it was logical to expect that they would have the greatest list of titles. On 1st January 1963, Walpamur (E.A.) Limited signed an agreement and agreed on a five-grade 29-job wage structure. In April 1963, Sadolins agreed to accept in toto the wage structure established in Kenya Paints.

So, it was pointed out, the last move by the Claimants had been their agreement to a further company coming under the six-grade structure. Further, of the total number employed by the Respondents, 58 per cent of the employees were paid in accordance with the six-grade structure, involving 23 job titles only. With this background the Respondents submitted that they were entitled to say to the Court that there was nothing rational or logical in accepting the Claimants' proposed structure with its 44 job titles—whereas there was considerable merit in adopting a sympathetic view of the Respondents' suggested structure which—

- (a) ensured that no employee suffered financial loss;
- (b) involved bringing the minority into line with the rational majority;
- (c) was in accordance with the accepted principle of job classification which required that jobs be allotted "to grades for which wage levels have been determined before the job evaluation begins"; and
- (d) was nearer to the established pattern of job titles in that it contained 18 against the average for the Respondents of 23.

AWARD

5. The Court, having given careful consideration to the evidence and submissions of the parties, awards as follows:—

In this cause the Court is confronted with two proposals of job classification, one based on five grades submitted by the Claimants, and the other by the Respondents based on six grades. There is a further distinction in the job titles in that the Claimants have suggested about 44 as against the Respondents' 18. Since the parties appeared before the Court on 31st October 1964, they have not got together to discuss and comply with the Court's direction mentioned below:—

"The Court directs that if any anomalies exist in the job classification the parties should get together and resolve them. The employers intimated their willingness to do so."

The Respondents asked the Claimants to suggest dates for a meeting for resolving this matter but the Claimants saw no point in having a meeting and insisted on their proposals being accepted as a basis for discussion. In these circumstances no meeting could be held. The Claimants are responsible for this due to their negative attitude.

The Court does not think it right to burden itself with the task of carrying out a job classification exercise for the parties. In view of the fact that the parties have not got together on this issue the Court directs that they do so and produce not only an agreed list of job titles but also their agreement or disagreement in grading these jobs. The Court further rules that as the majority of the employees are in six grades, six grades should be maintained for the whole group. This exercise should be carried out within a period of three months from the date hereof. If no information is received from the parties within the above period the cause will be understood settled.
