GENERAL NOTICE NO. 1345

LOCUST REPORT, 29TH SEPTEMBER, 1934.

KENYA.

The Red Locust.—Examination of further specimens received from the various young flying swarms now present in the Colony does not reveal any approach to maturity, and it is not anticipated that pairing will take place before the month of November.

The small swarm previously reported from Voi was about 2 acres in extent, and no damage was done.

On the 15th instant, a large swarm was observed crossing the Kavirondo Gulf in a north-westerly direction from Homa Bay.

Further swarms have been reported during the past fortnight from the following centres:—

On the 13th, a large swarm at Ulu Station flying west.

On the 17th, a small swarm near Fort Hall flying west; a large swarm at Buret flying north-west, subsequently reported to be entering the Mau forest, and a small swarm at Merafu in the Malindi district, flying west in the general direction of Kitui.

On the 20th, a small swarm at Makuyu flying north-west, and a dense swarm ten miles long was seen five miles south of Lolgorien flying south-west. This latter swarm is probably one of those previously reported as having entered the Mau forest from South Kavirondo and now returning south.

Several small swarms have visited the vicinity of Nairobi but none of those so far reported has been of serious dimensions.

Heavy damage to native crops was caused by the latest swarm in the Buret area, but otherwise no damage has been reported.

As there would appear to still exist considerable misunderstanding regarding the possibilities of dealing with flying swarms in general, it is perhaps desirable to place on record the experience gained in this and other countries in that connection. It has been found that any destruction campaign on a wholesale scale is, with the means at present at our disposal, an entirely uneconomic proposition, the cost of such destruction being out of all proportion to the results attained. It must be borne in mind that the areas to be treated are to be reckoned, not in acres, but in square miles, as swarms covering anything from 2 to 100 square miles are no uncommon occurrences. And when it is considered that the actual field costs of spraying with arsenite of soda at normal strength, and with a minimum dosage of 25 gallons to the acre, amount, at a very conservative estimate, to not less than Sh. 3 per acre, it will be seen that the expenditure for treating one square mile would amount to approximately £100. As the total area covered by the numerous swarms which have recently invaded the Colony cannot have been less than some 200 square miles, it will be realized that the field costs for the destruction of our recent swarms alone (and this does not include any allocations for administration, depreciation or transport charges, etc.), would have amounted to something in the neighbourhood of £20,000, and nearer £25,000, if the above allocations are included.

And it must further be remembered that such spraying operations can only be conducted where water is readily available, otherwise the transport charges would be entirely prohibitive.

The conclusion to be drawn is that until some far more economical method of distributing the poison over a large area is discovered, the destruction of flying swarms by spraying operations must remain an uneconomic undertaking. It is possible that distribution of poison dust from aeroplanes may prove to be the solution of the problem and while experiments on these lines, conducted in other countries, have yielded promising results, further exploration is being carried out with a view to testing the economic possibilities of the method. The cost of destruction from the air must, however, be high, and it is unlikely that this Colony will be able, for financial reasons, to indulge on its own account, in the employment of aerial methods.

H. J. CARLISLE,
for Director of Agriculture.
