The Court called G. M. Mwaniki, Assistant Registrar of Trade Unions, to give evidence.

AWARD

3. The Minister for Labour signed the reference of this dispute to the Industrial Court on 21st July, 1980 in accordance with section 7A of the Trade Disputes Act. The Court received the notification of dispute from the Minister on 23rd July.

The Claimants are a lawfully established and registered trade union since 6th December, 1977. Their registration came about through a High Court decision in Civil Appeal No. 26 of 1977. Justice A. H. Simpson in his judgment stated as follows towards the end:

"There is no indication that he considered whether a union composed largely of domestic and hotel workers could sufficiently represent the interests (or substantial proportion of the interests) of bakers and confectioners employed in the industry.

There is no indication that he considered the fact that a large number of such bakers and confectioners were so convinced that their interests were not being sufficiently represented that they had resigned from the union. Indeed in paragraph (d) of his affidavit the Assistant Registrar contended that he had been improperly joined as a party "to what in fact appears to be a dispute between the appellants and the domestic and hotel workers union relating to the running and management of the said union". Surely such dispute considering the large number of members involved was a matter to be taken into consideration in determining whether or not that union was sufficient representative of those bakers and confectioners who were industrial employees.

In my opinion the Registrar in the exercise of his discretion was bound to take into account the interests in respect of which the appellants seek registration i.e. their interests as industrial employees in contradiction to the interests of the other members of the union. This he has unfortunately failed to do.

The appeal is allowed. The decision of the Registrar of Trade Union dated 27th January, 1977 not to register the Kenya Bakers & Confectioners Union is set aside."

The Court would like to state at the outset that the Respondents' arguments challenging the Claimants' establishment and registration as a trade union in the context of the industrial relations system that has developed in Kenya over the years must be overruled in view of the High Court decision and the subsequent registration of the Claimants in accordance with the Trade Unions Act. In the absence of these two facts the Respondents may have had some validity in their arguments but not now.

The Claimants' constitution provides in rule No. 3 of their membership clause as follows:

"3 (a) Membership of the union shall be open to all employees engaged in bakeries, and to all employees engaged in pastries, biscuits, cakes, and sweets making factories provided such employee is of not less than sixteen years of age and his monthly salary does not exceed K.Sh. 3,500."

While on the question of membership, since the Domestic & Hotel Workers' Union has figured so prominently in this dispute and the Respondents have vigorously argued that since they have accorded recognition to this union the Claimants' demand must fail, the Court would like to examine the Domestic Union's membership clause as well which reads as follows:

"3 (a) Membership of the union shall be open to all employees engaged in hotels, bars and restaurants; private homes; clubs; private hospitals; educational institutions; religious undertakings; university and university colleges; bakeries; sweets and biscuit making factories including those employed as domestic servants, provided such employee is above the apparent age of sixteen years."

A close examination of the membership clause in the constitutions of these two unions clearly shows that there is a considerable amount of overlapping in that both trade unions cover bakeries and sweets and biscuit making establishments. At the same time it becomes apparent that the Domestic Union embraces employees in hotels, clubs, hospitals, educational and religious institutions and of course the domestic servants, whereas the Claimants are confined solely to employees engaged in bakeries and those engaged in pastries, biscuits, cakes and sweets manufacturing factories. It can be readily seen that the Claimants are a more specialized trade union, more concerned with looking after the interests of workers engaged in bakeries, biscuits, cakes and sweets manufacturing firms as against the Domestic Union which enjoys the right to represent workers in a wide range of service industries which prompted the Claimants to call them a "general union" as opposed to an industrial union.

The Respondents have resisted the Claimants' demand for recognition on the ground that they have recognized the Domestic Union since 28th August, 1965 and probably even earlier than that. The Court was, however, referred to an agreement between the Respondents and the Domestic Union dated 28th August, 1965 which is a sort of an agreement which combines both the recognition and collective agreements. In clause 15 (a) under the heading of check off authorization it is provided as follows:

"From the salaries of all employees covered by this agreement the employer shall make check off deductions. Each such deduction shall be made from the first pay of each month of the said employees. Ninety per cent of the amount so deducted will be paid into the account of the union with Barclays Bank Queensway branch, and 10 per cent of the amount so deducted will be paid into the account of the COTU with Barclays Bank Queensway branch once in each month on or before the expiration thereof.

Each employer shall furnish the union with a record of such deduction showing the amount thereof and the employee from whose wages such deductions were made."

The Court will refer to this clause hereinafter in the award but at this stage would like to examine the findings of an investigation committee appointed by the Ministry of Labour in the trade dispute between the parties before the Court. These findings clearly show that out of 300 unionizable employees working for the Respondents the Claimants since their registration in December, 1977 had recruited about 280 members and only 30 remained members of the Domestic Union. A secret ballot conducted by the investigating committee showed that 277 employees voted in favour of the Claimants while only seven voted for the Domestic Union. The Ministry's report continued as follows:

"Our industrial relations system is based on voluntary collective bargaining and voluntarily concluded collective agreements are the basis on which it operates. This Ministry has at all times insisted and maintained that any party entering into a collective agreement must ensure that such agreement is honoured. Failure by either party to honour a collective agreement can lead to industrial chaos and make the whole system unworkable.

As much as it is clear that most of the employees of House of Manji Ltd. have resigned from the Domestic Union and joined the recently registered Bakers & Confectioners Workers Union they are still covered by the terms and conditions of service obtained by the Domestic Union.

The Ministry cannot therefore entertain a claim for either violation, non-compliance or for that matter not to recognize the importance of the existence of a voluntarily concluded collective agreement.

In the circumstances the Kenya Bakers & Confectioners Workers' Union request for a recognition agreement with House of Manji Ltd. cannot be entertained. The workers should therefore continue to be represented by the Domestic & Hotel Workers' Union."

The Court finds that the Ministry's findings and recommendation are as a result of a mix up somewhere as the issue in dispute was clearly stated to be recognition and although the committee of investigation found that a vast majority of the unionizable employees had opted for the Claimants the committee proceeded to talk about collective agreements as opposed to a recognition agreement and then in its recommendation found that the Claimants' request for a recognition agreement with the Respondents cannot be entertained.

In this dispute the main issue is of recognition and not the breaking of an existing collective agreement. Once the question of recognition is decided the other matters like collective agreements can follow later without infringing the parties' obligations and rights incorporated therein.

There is little doubt that the committee of investigation seriously misled itself in making its findings and recommendation. It should be remembered that if any principles involving industrial relations in Kenya were at stake then they should be presumed to have been put forward before the High Court which Court allowed the appeal in Civil Appeal No. 26 of 1977 as a result of which the Claimants were registered as a trade union.

The recognition of the Domestic Union by the Respondents in the absence of a clearly worded and entirely separate recognition agreement and the check off forms signed by their employees in favour of the Domestic Union renders it very questionable. During the hearing insinuations were made by the Respondents that the workers had signed the check off forms in favour of the Domestic Union but that file had been lost from the Respondents' offices and that they had also disappeared from the file of the Registrar of Trade Unions. The Court finds this insinuation to be complete unfounded in view of Mr Mwaniki's evidence who was called by the Court to come and give evidence on this point. He said that he had gone through all the records but could not trace any copies of any check off forms in favour of the Domestic Union signed by the Respondents employees and stated that his department never received them. He said the security at his office was quite good and the documents are safe and it is not easy for anyone to remove them.

The Trade Dispute Act, 1965 has got very clear provisions on the operation of check off system and it is evident from the evidence before the Court that the Domestic Union did not comply with the relevant sections of this Act. Section 53 reads as follows:

"Any agreement or arrangement between an employer or organization of employers and a trade union of employees or federation of such trade unions which provides for the collection of trade union dues by any employer or which is otherwise inconsistent with this Part shall, to the extent of such inconsistency, be void and of no effect."

Sections 46 (1) (2) clearly have not been complied with by the Domestic Union. These sections read as follows:

"46 (1) The general-secretary of a trade union in respect of which the Minister has made an order under section 45 may at any time serve on an employer who employs not less than ten members of that trade union a notice or notices in the form in the second schedule, requiring the employer to comply with the Minister's order in respect of the employees who are named in any such notice and who have acknowledged by their signatures therein that they are members of that trade union.

(2) The general-secretary of any trade union which has served a notice on an employer under this section shall before the tenth day in each month inform that employer in writing of the names of any members of that trade union who are employed by him and who have in the preceding month ceased to be members of that trade union."

The Court was given no evidence either by the Domestic Union or the Respondents to show compliance with provisions of this section. The Trade Disputes Act, commenced on 8th June, 1965 and the agreement between the Respondents and the Domestic Union which contains a check off authorization in clause 15 (a) as quoted hereinabove was effective from 28th August, 1965. In the absence of the workers having signed any check off forms this provision is null and void as it impinges on an individual's right of freedom of association.

From the submissions made by the Claimants and the evidence given by the witnesses the Court is led to an inescapable conclusion that the Domestic Union has not really discharged its responsibilities to the Respondents' employees.

The documentary evidence produced by the Claimants clearly shows that the Respondents failed to make the necessary adjustments to the workers' salaries as a result of statutory improvements. Surely if the Domestic Union was interested in the welfare of the Respondents' employees then they would have seen to it that the workers got all the benefits to which they were entitled. This may partly be because the vast majority of the Respondents' employees had lost all confidence in the Domestic Union as was proved by the secret ballot conducted by the committee of investigation appointed by the Ministry of Labour when only seven employees voted for the Domestic Union as against 277 who voted in favour of the Claimants.

The witnesses called by the Claimants proved to the Court that the workers had completely lost faith in the Domestic Union because of its failure to achieve tangible gains for them. The trade unions who claim to represent employees have got to work hard for the benefit of their members. It is no use to anyone, least of all the workers, for a trade union to sit back complacently in the hope that whatever they agree with the employer will do as they enjoy recognition and the workers cannot join another trade union to fight more vigorously for their rights. In this case, however, the workers have found another trade union which is properly and legally constituted and registered and which can cater for their interests and they have without hesitation opted to join that trade union who are the Claimants.

The first check off forms which the Claimants forwarded to the Respondents were in April 1979 and from that day up to the conclusion of this hearing the Respondents have in defiance of their employees' clear instructions through check off forms, sent trade union dues amounting to K.Sh. 60,000 to the Domestic Union which strictly they should have sent to the Claimants. The reason for not complying with the Claimants' check off forms as given by the Respondents and the Domestic Union was that the workers had not revoked the check off forms which they had signed in favour of the Domestic Union.

The Court, however, has found that the workers had not any time signed any check off forms in favour of the Domestic Union, so the question of the revocation of the authority does not arise.

The only worthwhile point which the Respondents had put forward in resisting the Claimants' demand is that they are also entitled to have a say on which union to recognize and they relied on another High Court decision in Miscellaneous Application 275 of 1977 between the Kenya Management Staff Association (applicant) and Kenya Bus Services Co. Ltd. (respondent) where Mr. Justice Todd stated in his judgment in the last paragraph as follows:

"In any event and upon the evidence made available at the hearing of this application I would not be disposed to exercise any discretion that I might have to command the company to recognize the applicant union in a matter which I think is essentially one for voluntary agreement between the parties and so for the reasons herein given I would refuse to make an order of mandamus as applied for by the applicant union and upon such refusal I would award costs of this application to the respondent company."

In the same application Mr. Justice Platt in the last paragraph of his judgment stated as follows:

"It is clear therefore that in the process of bringing a trade union into being the Registrar may need to refuse some applications which, but for the those exceptions would be an infringement of section 80 (1). There is another important exception that other persons interests—"rights or freedoms" may need protection. The whole is to conform to what is reasonable and justifiable in a democratic society. It seems to me to be consistent with those aims, that the employer is not forced to recognize a trade union; though a further adjustment in the recognition process might also be in keeping.

It seems therefore that however widely one reads section 80 (1) no clear duty emerges such as this court could rely upon in granting the order of mandamus sought."

The Industrial Court would have been guided by this High Court decision had it not been for the fact that the definition of "trade dispute" in the Trade Disputes Act includes disputes regarding recognition agreements. This is so because if parties were left to their constitutional rights it would lead to serious confrontation between organized labour and the employers. It is by virtue of this provision and the Minister for Labour's powers under section 8 that this dispute is before the Court. In these circumstances the Industrial Court has been given the necessary powers to determine the issue of recognition notwithstanding the employer's refusal to recognize a particular trade union provided the Court is satisfied that a case for recognition has been made out. It should also be noted that under section 5 (2) of the Trade Disputes Act the Minister for Labour has been given special powers to order an employer to recognize a particular trade union under certain conditions with the party so ordered having a right of appeal to the Industrial Court against the Minister's order.

The Court would now like to deal with the Respondents' other submission which they have based on the revised Industrial Relations Charter. The Court has carefully studied the revised Charter dated 30th April, 1980 and its appendix B which contains the proposed reorganization of trade unions along industrial lines (revised). Towards the end of this appendix six trade unions including the Claimants are mentioned as left out to be deregistered. These are no more than mere proposals and further steps have to be taken to finalize the final set up of trade unions in the country based on industrial lines. This view is further reinforced by a letter which the deputy secretary-general or COTU (K) wrote to the Minister for Labour on 28th November 1980 and the Minister's reply thereto dated 21st January 1981 which reads as follows:

"Your interpretation of the understanding reached at the signing of the revised Industrial Relations Charter in respect of grouping of unions is correct. You may rest assured that the list attached to the revised Charter as an appendix will be treated as provisional until such time as it is discussed and agreed by the three parties."

On the question of the establishment of trade unions on industrial lines the Claimants have satisfied the Court that they have a potential membership of nearly 13,000 workers whom they can recruit and represent in the various industries who fall within the ambit of their membership. They also pointed out that baking and sweet manufacturing was an important industry all over the world and argued that as a matter of fact Domestic Union was not an industrial union but was merely a general trade union. The Court accepts the Claimants' statement as it was not refuted by the Respondents that they have obtained recognition agreements with quite a few firms since their registration and that also with the active participation of the Federation of Kenya Employers.

The Court has given anxious thought to the Respondents fear that by ordering them to recognize a trade union like the Claimants would lead to the fragmentation of the trade union structure in the country. With due respect to the Respondents it is not the Industrial Court that will be opening a chapter of disintegration of labour solidarity if indeed that be the case but the High Court has given a decision as a result of which the Registrar of Trade Unions registered the Claimants. This Court cannot reverse the situation that has been brought about by a High Court decision.

The Industrial Court has come to a decision in this dispute on the facts which are that the Claimants are a properly registered trade union and their constitution allows them to recruit and represent the Respondents' employees and that the vast majority of the Respondents' employees have opted to join them and desperately want the Claimants to represent their interests and that the Domestic Union which represents them appears to have been giving the employees rather poor services and finally there appear to be no prospects of industrial peace at the Respondents' undertaking if the Claimants are not allowed to be recognized by the Respondents to represent the interests of their members.

After careful consideration of all the submissions the Court is persuaded to believe along with the other points already made that the dictates of industrial peace require that the Claimants should be recognized by the Respondents. The Court has carefully considered the various submissions and has come to the conclusion that the Claimants are the proper trade union as opposed to the Domestic Union to represent the Respondents' employees.

The Court firmly believed that if the Claimants are not awarded recognition there would be serious industrial unrest at the Respondents' undertaking. The Court is satisfied that the Domestic Union has lost the confidence of the overwhelming majority of the Respondents' employees and should therefore give way to the Claimants who are the choice of the workers all other requirements having been fulfilled by them as enumerated hereinabove in the award.

Having found and awarded that the Respondents should recognize the Claimants the Court has now to decide the date from which such recognition should take effect and the resultant question of trade union dues arising from the check off forms which the Claimants and forwarded to the Respondents.

The Court has before it, in addition to the demand for recognition, a claim by the Claimants that the Court should order the trade union dues amounting to K.Sh. 60,000 which the Respondents had unlawfully sent to the Domestic Union to be paid to them by the Respondents so that the workers' wishes in respect of their check off forms signed by them are complied with. Unfortunately for the Claimants the dispute which the Minister for Labour has sent to the Court solely concerns the issue of recognition. In view of this the Court's hands are tied and the Court would be exceeding its jurisdiction if it proceeds to make awards on other matters like the Claimants' demand for K.Sh. 60,000 against the Respondents. The Court feels that this is a matter where the Claimants should resort to their ordinary civil remedy on behalf of their members.

Having said this the Court finds it proper that the Respondents should immediately comply with their employees' wishes as expressed in the check off forms sent to them with effect from the date which the Court will determine to be the date from which the Respondents should recognize the Claimants.

The Court has very carefully considered this rather sensitive point and has come to the conclusion that the recognition of the Claimants by the Respondents as awarded by the Court should be effective from 1st October 1980 and the Court directs the parties to immediately conclude a formal recognition agreement effective from 1st October 1980.

The period for lodging notice of opposition may be extended by the Registrar as he thinks fit and upon such terms as he may direct. Any request for such extension should be made to the Registrar so as to reach him before the expiry of the period allowed.

Formal opposition should not be lodged until after reasonable notice has been given by letter to the applicant for registration so as to afford him any opportunity of withdrawing his application before the expense of preparing the notice of opposition is incurred. Failure to give such notice will be taken into account in considering any application by an opponent for an order for costs if the opposition is uncontested by the applicant.
