- 2 Violation of job description and summaries clause of current agreement

1 The Kenya Petroleum Oil Workers' Union shall hereinafter be referred to as the Claimants and the Kenya Shell Ltd shall hereinafter be referred to as the Respondents

2 The parties were heard in Nairobi on 17th, 18th and 31st day of July 1969. In addition to relying on their written and verbal submissions the Claimants called two witnesses. The Respondents did not call any witness.

AWARD

In late December 1965, three oil companies, namely Caltex, Mobil Oil and Total Oil Products amalgamated their aviation services and in the process laid off some employees through redundancy. The Claimants protested strongly at this as they had at no time been informed of the intended redundancies. A trade dispute developed between the three companies and the Claimants and the workers at the instigation of the Claimants, took industrial action in the shape of a "go-slow", their objective being to force the three oil companies to reinstate the workers who had lost their jobs.

The Ministry of Labour intervened in the dispute and a one-man board of inquiry was appointed. Dr N C Otieno was appointed chairman and the sole member of the board. The board's report was released on 20th January 1966, and on 28th January 1966, an agreement was signed between the parties which resulted, amongst other things, in the reinstatement of the 12 persons who had been dismissed and the two who had been declared redundant.

Under Recommendation E, the board recommended that 'Part 1, clause 8, of the agreement should be amended to include provision for time limits within which employers should hold discussions with the Union before any redundancies are effected' and suggested a period of 14 days at least. This particular recommendation caused considerable difficulty both to the Claimants and the oil industry and resulted in a couple of applications to the board for further clarification. On 28th June 1966, the board gave a final clarification on the words 'the basis of redundancies must be negotiated before they are actually effected'. The chairman of the board clearly stated that—from the presentations by both parties, the question arose as to whether or not the claimant must be convinced of the respondent's reasons for such redundancies before they can be effected thereby questioning the very basis of the employers prerogative to organize his business as he likes and to declare redundancies as laid down in the recognition agreement clause 8 (a). This the board found was beyond its terms of reference—and feels that an interpretation of such a basic clause in a basic document should be forwarded probably to the Industrial Court in the normal manner."

Prior to the aforesaid clarification by the board, the oil industry spokesman had written to the Permanent Secretary, Ministry of Labour, with a copy to the General Secretary of the Claimants on 26th January 1966, in which he had clearly stated the board's recommendation that a minimum period of 14 days' notice should be given to the Union by employers before effecting redundancies will be followed in future". Again on 22nd February 1966, the oil industry spokesman had written to the Claimants' General Secretary and stated at one place 'in view of the delay which has already occurred, and in accordance with the board of inquiry recommendations, we are now giving you a further 14 days' notice to enable discussions to take place prior to effecting the redundancies'."

The Claimants and the Oil Industry of Kenya were parties to a dispute before the Industrial Court vide Cause No 77/66 and amongst the issues in dispute was "revision of terms and conditions of service" which issue involved each and every clause of the comprehensive agreement that existed between the parties and was divided into seven parts. As a result the parties submitted memoranda running into hundreds of pages including the various appendices. The Court was presented with a very comprehensive agreement which had expired with a new draft prepared by the oil industry in which some of the old clauses had been deleted, some had been simplified and some had been modified in accordance with their demands. The Claimants on the other hand submitted their version of what the new agreement should look like reflecting their demands on practically every important item in the agreement. The Court in making its award made it clear that where no specific reference was made to any existing clause then such a clause should continue in force.

The Claimants maintained that the clause covering the question of redundancy as it appears in the current collective bargaining agreement which was drawn up after the Industrial Court award is the same as it existed prior to Dr Otieno's board of inquiry. Since following the publication of the board of inquiry recommendations the oil industry had given an unequivocal undertaking that 14 days' notice would be given before any redundancies are effected, and that undertaking should be read into the existing clause. They further argued that the Industrial Court had not made any specific award on the question of redundancies. Therefore the redundancy clause stood as it was subject to the undertaking given by the oil industry after the board of inquiry recommendations.

The Respondents have relied very strongly on the current collective bargaining agreement and have stated that their actions were strictly in accordance with the clause in the agreement on redundancy. They strongly challenged the Claimants' contention that the oil industry had at any time undertaken after the board of inquiry report to give 14 days' notice prior to effecting any redundancy. They further maintained that it was the management's inviolable right to organize business as it liked and that this particular matter could never be a matter for negotiation with any union.

The Court finds that there is strong force in this argument which is of considerable merit but the fact remains that by giving the union representing a body of workers a notice of the proposed redundancies it does not necessarily mean that an employer would be surrendering his prerogative of organizing his business in the manner he liked. It is usually wise, even if it is not specifically provided for in the agreement to inform the union leadership in advance of the coming redundancies and discharges, and the period should be long enough to allow the union officials to inform their branches or anyone else they may wish to. This principle has been underlined in the Industrial Relations Charter where it is clearly provided under the heading of redundancies as follows —

1 The union concerned shall be informed of the reasons for and the extent of intended redundancy

2 The principle should be adopted of 'last in, first out' in the particular category of employees affected subject to all other factors such as skill, relative merit, ability and reliability being equal

3 The redundant employee will be entitled to the appropriate period of notice or pay in lieu. The principle of severance pay is agreed but the form and amount of such pay shall be subject to joint negotiation."

In view of the aforesaid circumstances and background to this dispute the Court has no alternative but to find that the oil industry has undertaken to give 14 days' notice to the Claimants before effecting redundancies. The Court further finds that the redundancy is "effected" when a worker is served with a notice telling him that he had been declared redundant. So in fact a 14 days' notice was necessary prior to letters of termination of service being sent to the workers. It must be said here in fairness to the Respondents that there has been a genuine misunderstanding on what Dr Otieno's board of inquiry had recommended and the Respondents' actions relevant to the current dispute stem from the said misunderstanding.

As far as the case of the three drivers involved in this dispute is concerned, it is common ground that the Claimants were not given 14 days' notice prior to the letters terminating the services of these employees were issued. The Respondents, however, argued that the 14 days' notice is covered in the month's notice of termination of service which they had sent to these employees but the Court cannot accept this submission as the whole object for which a prior notice of intended redundancies is to be given to the union is defeated. The idea behind this notice is to allow consultations to take place between the parties and also for the union to be able to explain the situation to its members before the notices of termination go out.

For these reasons the Court finds that the services of the three employees involved in this dispute were terminated contrary to Dr Otieno's board of inquiry recommendations of 1966 which to all intents and purposes form part of the current collective bargaining agreement. This being the position the Court rules that these three persons should be deemed to be still in the employment of the Respondents and that if the latter still want to terminate their services then they should give 14 days' notice of their intention to do so to the Claimants and then follow it up by terminating the services of these employees in accordance with the provisions of the agreement.

On the second issue the Court is not prepared to accept the Claimants' submission that the oil industry had taken advantage of a new General Secretary of the Claimants in varying and departing from the job description and summaries which were originally the subject of agreement between the parties in 1962 at a JIC meeting. The Court must uphold the principle that the dealings in industrial matters are not confined to personalities but are dealings between institutions. This being the position the Claimants are deemed to have accepted the Respondents' contention that a driving licence was a prerequisite for a supervisor to be promoted to the next grade. The Court finds that at all times the fuelling supervisors have been fully aware of the requirements to drive and that the Claimants recognized that this practice had been in existence since 1964, further that in their discussions in 1968 they had fully agreed with the fact that fuelling supervisors had always been required.

to drive and that driving was an inseparable part of their duties. The Court accepts the Respondents' explanation that they were engaging supervisors without driving licences to facilitate Africanization.

The Claimants called two witnesses on this issue but on careful examination of their evidence the Court is led to the conclusion that supervisors accept that driving is part of their job as both these supervisors, on being transferred to Nairobi Airport, started driving the refuellers without any protest. It is significant to note that there are 32 fuelling supervisors in the Respondents' aviation services throughout Kenya and they have only three drivers in the total set up.

After a careful consideration of all the submissions made by the parties, the Court finds that the Respondents have not violated job description and summaries clause of the current agreement.

THE INDUSTRIAL COURT

CAUSE NO 21 OF 1969

Parties —

Kenya Petroleum Oil Workers' Union
and

Oil Companies in Kenya Oil Industry

Issue in dispute —

Redundancy and redundancy clause

1 The Kenya Petroleum Oil Workers' Union shall hereinafter be referred to as the Claimants and the Oil Companies in Kenya Oil Industry shall hereinafter be referred to as the Respondents.

2 The parties were heard in Nairobi on the 7th day of August 1969, and relied on their written and verbal submissions.

AWARD

During the period late 1966 and the whole of 1967, a number of oil companies in Kenya declared many workers redundant. The Claimants alleged that the work done by these workers was contracted out by the companies to private contractors and in some cases to their Asian ex-employees. The Claimants took up the question of redundancies in the oil industry with the Minister for Labour and on 23rd November 1967, drew his attention to the serious situation which had developed in this industry. The Minister appointed a committee of investigation which after concluding its work formulated the following recommendation which was to form the basis of settlement of this matter —

'The union and the companies in the industry through the Joint Industrial Council should, within 45 days from the date of this letter, frame a mutually acceptable procedure for informing the union of the reasons for and the extent of all the intended redundancies before the redundancy notices are actually given to the employees.'

It appears that both the parties accepted the recommendation of this committee of investigation and the matter was tabled at a Joint Industrial Council (JIC) meeting held on 16th January 1969. At this meeting the Claimants had put forward their proposals on the redundancy clause which proposals the Respondents were unable to accept. Consequently no agreement was reached and the Claimants reported the dispute to the Ministry of Labour on 26th February 1969. On 16th April 1969, the dispute was accepted by the Ministry but no action was taken for about two months. On 13th June 1969, the Claimants threatened strike action after seven days' notice. On 19th June 1969, the parties signed an agreement that—

1 The issue of redundancy and redundancy clause be submitted to the Industrial Court for adjudication. It was further agreed that in the circumstances, neither party should act in a manner likely to jeopardize the Court proceedings.

2 "It was also agreed that the threatened strike by Kenya Petroleum Oil Workers' Union is cancelled immediately."

There is no doubt that over the years many workers have gradually lost their jobs in the oil industry and according to the Claimants since 1962 about 1,500 workers had been laid off in the oil industry. This is indeed an alarming situation and it is not surprising that redundancy had caused industrial strife in the oil industry. There is evidence of a board of inquiry having looked into the question of redundancies in the oil companies in late December 1965. This was followed by another committee of investigation towards the end of 1967. The Claimants have all along strongly protested that the oil companies do not give them any notice of the intended redundancies and they come to know of such redundancies only when the workers have been issued with notices of termination of their services.

In Cause No 20 of 1969 between the Claimants and Kenya Shell Ltd the Court has ruled that 14 days notice to the Claimants prior to effecting any redundancies as recommended by Dr Otieno's board of inquiry was part of the existing collective bargaining agreement as the Respondents had undertaken to give such notice after findings of the board had been published.

The issue before the Court now is redundancy and redundancy clause and the Respondents have asked the Court to make no award on this matter because the collective bargaining agreement continues in force up to 1st November 1969. The Court is unable to accept this submission because—

(a) the agreement which is mentioned hereinabove as a result of which the threatened strike by the Claimants was averted clearly states that the issue of redundancy and redundancy clause be submitted to the Industrial Court for adjudication, and

(b) if the Respondents had not agreed to the redundancy clause being reviewed by the Industrial Court then the issue in dispute as claimed by the parties should have clearly stated so.

The Court rules that what the parties have asked it to do is to examine the existing redundancy clause in the collective bargaining agreement and either to revise it as demanded by the Claimants or to reject it as demanded by the Respondents, or to make such award as the Court may deem fit.

In a young and developing country like Kenya, any redundancy particularly a major one, is bound to cause serious concern. This is natural because of the scarcity of jobs and the immense numbers of unemployed in the country. This is indeed a national problem which has received top priority at the hands of the Government. In view of the serious nature of this problem the unions naturally feel that employers should not be allowed to declare redundancies unchecked. The Court appreciates their feelings but at the same time the Court has also to take into consideration the traditional right of an employer to manage and organize his business in a manner that suits him best. It is a worldwide practice that in the absence of express legislation restricting employers' right in this respect, employers are generally allowed to declare redundancies as and when they find it necessary. The Court feels that it would not be out of place for the unions in Kenya to make appropriate representations to the Government on this point but until such a time as there is specific legislation requiring employers to seek permission of the Industrial Court before they can declare any redundancies, the Court is not inclined to depart from a worldwide practice and to impose such restrictions on employers in Kenya.

The Court does feel, however, that the clause on redundancy should be worded in such a manner that it takes into account the recommendations enunciated in the Industrial Relations Charter. Accordingly, after a careful consideration of all the submissions made by the parties, the Court awards the following new clause to replace the existing 1-19 (a) of the collective bargaining agreement —

Should it be deemed necessary by the companies to terminate the services of any employee or employees for reasons of redundancy, consideration of either membership or non-membership of the union shall not be taken into account. The selection of such termination will be based on the principle of "last in first out". The companies shall notify the union in writing of their intended redundancy and reason thereof and the extent of the intended redundancy at least two months prior to notifying the employees concerned and effecting the redundancy. The companies agree to meet the union during this period in order to discuss the redundancy.

The Court has given anxious thought to the problem of the work which is being contracted out in the oil industry but has come to the conclusion that in the present dispute the parties did not either argue this matter in great detail or present the Court with adequate information on it. Consequently the Court is not able, on such a sketchy information, to make an award which may have very serious and far reaching implications not only in the oil industry but in the whole country. The Court recommends that the parties should look into this problem carefully when their collective bargaining agreement is revised in a couple of months' time and try to resolve it satisfactorily.
