GAZETTE NOTICE No 1087

THE INDUSTRIAL COURT
CAUSE NO 29 OF 1972

Parties —

Kenya Electrical Trades Workers Union
and
EA Power & Lighting Co Ltd

Issues in dispute —

Interpretation of the following—

- 1 Shift allowance
- 2 Standby allowance
- 3 Charge allowance
- 4 Special duty allowance

1 The Kenya Electrical Trades Workers Union shall herein after be referred to as the Claimants and EA Power & Lighting Co Ltd shall hereafter be referred to as the Respondents

2 The parties were heard in Nairobi on the 28th day of February, 1973, and relied on their written and verbal submissions

AWARD

3 The parties arrived at and signed an agreement on 7th February, 1972, during conciliation when several items in dispute were settled. This was during the revision of the Collective Agreement which came into effect on 1st September, 1968 and was for the duration of a minimum period of two years and four months.

The settlement on the four items in dispute was recorded in the said agreement during conciliation and was signed by the Claimants' General Secretary, the Respondents' Personnel Manager and the Conciliator, D M Kimani.

The agreement on these four items as recorded is as follows —

- (a) Shift allowance—It is agreed that shift workers will be paid at the rate of 3 per cent whenever one is required to work regular shift

- (b) Standby allowance—It is agreed that whenever one is in standby, he will be paid 3 per cent of his salary
- (c) Charge allowance—It is agreed that 3 per cent pay shall be paid to employees in A and B scales—in charge of more than three workers
- (d) Special duty allowance—It is agreed that payment of 3 per cent shall be made to A and B employees only per day"

In May, 1972, the Claimants raised the question of the interpretation of the agreement reached on these four items and the Respondents sought the assistance of the Permanent Secretary who asked the Conciliator to tell exactly what was agreed between the parties

The Conciliator's interpretation was as follows —

"The interpretation of shift allowance, standby allowance, special duty allowance and charge allowance seem to be self explanatory. It can only confuse a person who does not understand what one means by referring to '½ of 2 hours during the gazetted holidays'

In this respect, allowance means payment of the time worked plus 3 per cent of the time worked. For example if a man's salary is Sh 300 per month, he will get Sh 300 + (3/100 × 300) = Sh 300 + - 9 = Sh 309, etc"

The Claimants did not accept this interpretation and strongly objected to the Conciliator giving his views as according to them it was not his function to give interpretation. They asked the Permanent Secretary to convene another conciliation meeting but the Permanent Secretary did not see the need of any such further meeting. Thereupon the Claimants reported a trade dispute and the Tripartite Committee recommended direct reference to the Industrial Court and the parties signed the Notification of Dispute Form "A" on 29th July, 1972, and the Labour Commissioner signed his certificate on 14th August, 1972.

The Claimants strongly maintain that all along they had wanted and understood the Respondents to have agreed to the payment of all these allowances to the workers on the basis of 3 per cent of their monthly basic pay per day. They also said that these allowances were applicable to employees engaged on mobile construction group housed in temporary accommodation for each night they are required to be absent from the locality in which they are based.

They asked the Court to uphold their interpretation as otherwise 41 employees would be worse off than before the revised agreement and this the Claimants and the workers could never accept.

The Claimants were very critical of the Respondents for having implemented the agreement in accordance with their interpretation before the Industrial Court had given its decision on the dispute.

The Respondents submitted that what the Claimants were really after was to obtain a fresh award from the Court different from what had been agreed during conciliation. They pointed out that the Conciliator had clearly warned the Claimants before they signed the agreement that some of the workers would be adversely affected but despite this warning they had gone ahead with their demand and signed the agreement.

The Respondents strongly submitted that their interpretation was correct and that the Conciliator had also upheld it. They said that the use of the word "whenever" in the agreement was the answer to the dispute. It means specific period and allowances earned during the period and based on percentage (not fixed) must surely have the relationship with the basic salary earned during the specific period unless otherwise stated. They maintained that if what the Claimants say was intended then the word "monthly" should have been included in the signed agreement as was the case with the transfer allowance.

They asked the Court to uphold their interpretation which was in line with that of the Conciliator that the meaning of the agreements reached and signed is that an employee would be paid the relevant allowance of 3 per cent of the salary earned for the period he qualifies for such an allowance.

Rarely has the Court been asked to adjudicate on a dispute of this nature where the parties having arrived at a settlement in the presence of a Conciliator are not able to define as to what they agreed and one party, the Claimants in this case, is even rejecting the interpretation of the Conciliator.

It is obvious that the Claimants had not studied the full implications of their demands on these items and only when the agreement was concluded and implemented did they realize the blunder they had made. Under pressure from the workers who are worse off than before they have challenged the interpretation of these agreements.

In order to determine what the parties intended and agreed it is necessary to see what were the arrangements on these items under the 1968 agreement which are set out quite clearly in clauses 41, 42, 43 and 44.

The Respondents admitted that the new allowances agreed would have adverse effects on employees concerned and in a circular dated 19th June, 1972, they gave the necessary details. In view of this they at their sole discretion and in the interest of employees' welfare declared that under certain circumstances the employees will continue receiving the old allowance.

They stated in Court that as a result out of some 2,200 employees only 41 are worse off in respect of shift and standby allowances only. The Court has noted that the Claimants have indicated that if their interpretation is not upheld then they would prefer the old allowances to continue.

The Court has carefully considered the two versions and finds that the one put forward by the Claimants would lead to absurd results. This was illustrated to the Claimants during the hearing when they were shown that the allowance on their interpretation could amount to about 75 per cent of a worker's wage under certain circumstances.

On the other hand there is no doubt that under the new agreement the workers are worse off.

The Court finds that the Respondents' interpretation as confirmed by the Conciliator conforms with the general practice on these allowances in the country which is that the workers on these special duties are either paid a fixed monthly allowance in addition to their wages or that they are paid an additional allowance related to their basic salary earned during the actual time worked on these duties. The Claimants realize this only too well and are seeking a way out of a very undesirable situation created by them by suggesting as a last resort that they should be allowed to revert to old allowances. Equally the Respondents are also a party to this unfortunate result. In fact had the Respondents not at their sole discretion agreed to old rates being paid the result would have been much worse. The Court was told that these 41 employees are engaged on very vital work but because of revised gradings the privilege of allowances at the old rates was not extended to them.

Keeping in mind the necessity of requiring the parties to stick to free and voluntarily negotiated agreements either at their own level or at conciliation and the fact that it would indeed be hard and undesirable for any worker to accept a reduction in his emoluments as a result of a revision of a Collective Agreement (when an increase is expected) the Court has come to the conclusion that whilst the Respondents' interpretation is correct they should, in the interest of good industrial relations and as an evidence of their good faith and enlightenment, extend the privilege of paying allowances at old rates to these 41 employees as well. In view of obvious difficulties the Court rules that these employees should be reverted to their old allowances with effect from 1st January, 1973, and that their such entitlement is to be considered strictly personal to them.

Timber Industries Employers Association

INTERPRETATION APPLICATION—RULING

The Court announced its award in the above dispute on 2nd February, 1973, and while noting the present wage structure which was the subject matter of review in the dispute, awarded that the workers should get a wage increase of Sh 30 p.m. from 1st June, 1972, for the first 15 months, thereafter they should get another wage increase of Sh 15 p.m. for the next 15 months.

The Respondents have applied for an interpretation of the award and seek clarification as follows —

'Is the ruling of the Court to the effect that the wage structure shown in the Award is increased by Sh 30 in each case (and a further Sh 15 after a further 15 months) or does each man get an increase of Sh 30 regardless of the wage structure?'

To give an example—

A man in Group I was entitled to Sh 214 p m Being an old employee originally paid above the agreed rate, he was actually receiving Sh 220 p m Does this man now have to be paid Sh 250 p m or is the applicable rate Sh 244 when the employer would follow the established practice and make an additional personal allowance of Sh 3 p m (ie one half of the pre-existing personal differential) and thus pay the man Sh 247 in practice"

The Respondents during the hearing further elaborated the point and felt that the Court award in their interpretation meant that the existing wage rates were increased by Sh 30 and Sh 15 with effect from the respective dates and if any worker was earning above his rate then such worker would get only the difference to bring his wage up to the new level

The Claimants strongly maintained that the award gave each worker the specified increase on his wage and informed the Court that the Federation of Kenya Employers had given the same interpretation as them and further that 93 per cent of the Respondents' members had also accepted this interpretation

They submitted that any increase given by the employers before the award was a merit increase and as such the workers should continue to enjoy it without setting it off against the wage increase granted by the Court

The Court rules that the Claimants' interpretation of its award is correct because if the Court had intended to increase the rates for the various groups then the Court would have expressly stated this, instead the Court has awarded that the workers should get a wage increase as specified therein The award is quite clear and each worker gets an increase of Sh 30 and Sh 15 on due dates The Court would like to add that the Respondents did not make any submission on the point which they have raised now during the hearing
