SCHEDULE

INTRODUCTION

Water is a basic requirement for life sustenance and as a socio-economic good. Under the Bill of Rights, everybody should have a right of access to water of adequate quantity and quality. Rights go with obligations. Therefore, whoever has a right of access to water should also have the responsibility to protect and use it in a sustainable manner to meet present and future needs. Contrary to these expectations, is that most people in developing countries including Kenya do not yet have access to water of adequate quantity and quality. Lack of access can be attributed to shortage in space and time as well as limitations imposed by poor water quality.

Except the Lake Victoria basin that could be rated as water surplus area through natural endowment, the rest of Kenya is water deficit. The water-shortage situation in the arid and semi-arid as well as peri-urban areas is particularly pathetic. The increasing water shortage is exacerbated by water quality impairment and catchment area degradation among other factors. The figure 647 m³ per capita freshwater availability and its downward trend is a major point of concern when compared with the global benchmark of 1000m³ per capita and in consideration of the growing water demand to support socio-economic development to meet the Millennium Development Goals by 2015 and the national Vision 2030 among other aspirations. Arising from such concerns, the Government has undertaken implementation of the Water Sector Reforms that are mainly anchored on integrated water resources management and the internationally agreed Dublin principles. Through these reforms, Water Resources Management Authority (WRMA) has been established as the Lead Agency in the management of the national water resources. The Authority brings a new paradigm in the national water resources management aimed at improving management of the scarce water resources situation and reversing the downward trend on water resources availability.

The Authority is expected to lead the country in dealing with issues and challenges associated with water resources dynamics in regard to scarcity and excess. In water scarce areas, conflicts often arise as water users scramble for the resource to meet their individual water use needs. Such conflicts are common amongst farmers, commercial water users and pastoralists. Besides resource use conflicts, extreme hydrologic events of droughts and floods are on the increase. These events are to a great extent influenced by human activities on the water catchment areas. Climate change and variability has also an impact on the hydrologic events.

Although human activities are intended to meet livelihood needs, some of them have far reaching effects and contribute immensely to degradation of water resources. Among the destructive human activities, is the encroachment into water catchment areas and the indiscriminate clearing of vegetation cover. The rate of de-forestation in Kenya for example has reached alarming levels by reducing the national forest cover to less than 1.7% against the global threshold of 10%. The consequences of this de-forestation and catchment degradation are very grave to the country. Already, a lot of top soil is being lost through erosion at the slightest down-pouring, resulting into high sediment loads that are shocking rivers, wetlands, lakes and man-made water storage facilities. A typical example of such implications is the reduced depth of Lake Baringo from 15 m in 1921 to the current less than 1.8 m, the reduced depth of Nzoia River channel (with negative implications on the Government's effort on dyke's rehabilitation), siltation of Sabaki water intake and beach fouling at the mouth of major rivers to mention but a few cases. Where depth of watercourses has significantly been affected, fish breeding is adversely affected and flooding becomes the norm. All these implications translate into economic losses, threat to human life and alteration of ecosystems.

Other activities with grave consequences to water resources include poor management and indiscriminate dumping of wastes, poorly planned quarrying and mining and generally poor land use practices.

Issues surrounding water resources are further aggravated by increased and diversified water use without commensurate storage. According to the observed demand trends, domestic water use estimated at 1.1 million cubic meters/day in 1990, is expected to increase as population increases to about 2.8 million cubic meters by the year 2010. Overall water use to support growing population and the economy is expected to increase to 5800 million cubic meters by the year 2010. Management of water resources will therefore need to be improved to ensure that increasing water demands are met without compromising on the quality of life and ecosystem water requirements.

Agriculture is the mainstay of Kenya's economy and a major water user. It earns about 60% of foreign exchange and generates almost 70% of employment opportunities. Given that rain fed agriculture cannot guarantee national food security, irrigated agriculture has been emphasized and underscored by the Strategy to Revitalize Agriculture (SRA). This implies that more water will be required in the agricultural sector to sustain irrigation water demands and facilitate the realization of the Vision 2030 in agriculture and food production.

Livestock production is another sector that is severely affected by water scarcity. During the 1999-2000 drought for example, the country lost about 26% of her total livestock valued at KSh.5.8 billion. Due to demands for livestock products, livestock population are expected to increase and with it an increase in demand for water to an estimated level of 170 million cubic meters by the year 2010.

Other sectors with increasing water demands include tourism, fisheries, industrial and energy production as well as ecosystem support. To meet these growing water demands effective water resources management including conservation of water catchment areas and enhancement of storage should be emphasized.

WATER SECTOR REFORMS

Against the backdrop of the challenges facing the water sector and the need to optimize water use benefits to improve livelihoods, the Government has been implementing water sector reforms starting with the formulation of the national Water Resources Management and Development Policy in 1999 and the enactment of the Water Act, 2002. Institutional reforms have also been undertaken where roles and responsibilities of the various water sector institutions have been separated and clearly spelt out. The establishment of WRMA among the new sector institutions was immediately followed with formulation of the National Water Resources Management Strategy (NWRMS) that gives a national perspective on how water resources should be managed, protected, used, and developed, conserved and controlled. Based on the strategy, the Authority has adopted river basin approach for water resources management. The approach coupled with the natural drainage patterns has translated into dividing the country into six major catchment areas.

Building on the NWRMS, the Authority has formulated a Catchment Management Strategy (CMS) for each of the six catchment areas. The objective of the CMS is to increase knowledge on the status of the water and catchment resources and evolve with the stakeholders improved ways of managing the resources thereof to create sustainable livelihood support systems without compromising on the quality of the resource and status of the catchment area. The CMS process recognizes water as a finite and vulnerable resource with both social and economic values. It further recognizes the need for participatory management to enhance good governance and mitigate resource use conflicts. To ensure sustainability, the CMS emphasizes the need to re-invest income accruing from the economic use of water in the protection of water resources to enhance availability of good quality water. While encouraging diverse use of water to improve livelihoods it recognizes environment as a water user and sets a water reserve that should be left in the stream to meet environmental water demands. The various themes dealt with in the CMS formulation are aimed at sustainable management of water resources as summarized in the subsequent section.

STRATEGIES AND STRATEGIC ACTIONS

The Catchment Management Strategies have identified strategic actions in line with NWRMS for effective and sustainable management of water resources at catchment level. These are as follows:

1. Water Resources Classification and Management Approach

This section provides details on the management approaches that are considered appropriate for the progressive improvement of water resources management in the catchment area. Details of the basis for determining management units to guide the implementation of the CMS are also spelt out. The Authority adopted an approach where appropriate technologies and participatory processes are the main focus in the implementation of CMS to ensure sustainability.

Strategic Actions

- (i) Classification of surface and groundwater resources and springs spatially.
- (ii) Setting of resource quality objectives (RQOs).
- (iii) Classification of the catchment areas into management units based on dominant activity in the unit. The activities are mainly considered using ecological, commercial and livelihood classification criteria.

2. Water Balance and Water Demand Management

A description of the water balance status within the catchment is provided with respect to availability of the resource and demand. It shows that the water balance has to consider the Reserve as well as the future water demands, needs for storage and possibilities for transfers. The information will be used to develop water allocation plans to mitigate the resource deficits, to identify deficit and surplus areas for infrastructure development, transfers and inform transboundary water negotiations where appropriate.

Strategic Actions

- (a) Assess the availability of natural water resources, use and demand.
- (b) Develop future baseline scenarios including reconciling water requirements with available resources to address deficits including transfer options.
- (c) Review and update the methodology for better water balancing.

3. Water Allocation and Water Use Management

As a result of inadequate water resources management in the country in the past and due to weak enforcement of compliance to legislation, many water abstractions were illegal. Over 90% of all boreholes did not have permits while over 50% of the water abstractions were not complying with the existing permit requirements. The strategy therefore proposes adherence to Water Resources Management Rules, 2007, improved water usage metering and comprehensive water accounting as cornerstones to achieving water allocation and use efficiency.

Strategic Actions

- (a) Identification of major water uses and users.
- (b) Developing allocation plan together with thresholds for sub-catchments and categorizing abstractors.
- (c) Operationalizing water abstraction permit systems.
- (d) Developing enforcement plan and rolling out plan for water use charges.
- (e) Promoting water conservation measures through awareness campaigns.
- (f) Capacity building of staff on permitting processes, enforcement and implementation.

4. Water Resources Protection

This section describes the approach and options adopted in order to protect water resources and water bodies with respect to the holistic characteristics of the water resources. The aim here is to ensure that the sources are retained in their natural state as much as possible. The focus of the Authority in this chapter is therefore to protect and control the use of water resources in the catchment with respect to quantity and quality. This relates closely to the determination of the Reserve water. The reserve determines the minimum quantity and quality of the water resource that is set aside for basic environmental and human uses.

Strategic Actions

- (a) Defining and interpreting classification system and RQOs.
- (b) Analyzing of hydrological records (both surface and groundwater) and aquifer characteristics.
- (c) Developing collaborative arrangements to ensure water polluters comply with regulations.
- (d) Raising awareness of pollution of water resources both in the formal and informal sector.
- (e) Applying Reserve quality system.
- (f) Facilitating formulation of codes of practice and effluent discharge control plans in harmony with related institutions.
- (g) Disseminating codes of practice for effluent discharge while advocating for pollution prevention.
- (h) Identifying and prioritizing stressed water resources for protection.
- (i) Incorporating Environmental Impact Assessment (EIA) in all development projects/programmes with significant impacts on water resources.
- (j) Strengthening inspection, monitoring and data gathering on municipal wastewater and solid waste disposal.
- (k) Carrying out public awareness campaigns on water, sanitation and hygiene.
- (l) Formulating water quality standards for different classes of water resource.
- (m) Controlling nutrient, sediments and pollutants discharge into water bodies.

5. Catchment Protection and Conservation

This chapter provides details regarding the strategy for catchment protection and conservation. It looks at the different types of land use and addresses each separately. The strategy is based on the zoning of the catchment area. Close cooperation and harmonization with the Kenya Forest Service, Ministry of Agriculture and Kenyan Wildlife Service among other key institutions is advocated. The risk based approaches in balancing catchment management actions against vulnerability of the catchment area are emphasized.

Strategic Actions

- (a) Completing inventory, surveys, maps etc for all protection and conservation areas.
- (b) Prioritizing and delineation of the strategic and major areas for conservation and protection.
- (c) Zoning of the catchment areas for integrated protection and conservation.
- (d) Rehabilitation of groundwater conservation areas and protection of riparian zones.
- (e) Initiating and support the rehabilitation and protection of pilot water catchment areas.
- (f) Harmonizing programme in rehabilitation of land use, agriculture, forests, wildlife and settlement.
- (g) Protecting and gazeting water catchment areas.

6. Institutional Development and Collaboration

Institutional development and collaboration are considered key for effective and sustainable management of water resources. Mechanisms for coordination and measures required to enhance the capacity of different institutions to perform their roles for improved integrated water resources catchment management are outlined. At catchment level, WRMA has established Catchment Area Advisory Committees (CAACs) which comprise representatives of different water users while at sub-catchment level, Water Resource Users Associations (WRUAs) are being formed for cooperative management of water resources and resolution of water related conflicts. Mechanisms for WRMA institutions to coordinate with other water sector institutions are key in this section.

Strategic Actions

- (a) Operating WRMA offices in the catchment effectively.
- (b) Carrying out training needs assessment for next five years and conduct training.
- (c) Timely and participatory intervention in hot spots and facilitate formation of WRUAs.
- (d) Capacity building WRUAs and develop Sub-Catchment Management Plans (SCMPs) for effective water resources management.
- (e) Participatory implementation of SCMPs by WRUAs with technical support from WRMA.
- (f) Developing regional mechanisms for stakeholder participation (communication strategies).
- (g) Improving communication mechanisms between stakeholders.
- (h) Developing and managing effective internal and external communication.
- (i) Active participation and sectoral cooperation for effective water resources management.
- (j) Initiating and enhancing stakeholder participation as well as building synergies in management of water resources.

7. Water Infrastructure Development

This section provides details on the strategy for infrastructure development in order to improve storage. Uneven distribution of water together with rainfall both spatially and temporally has resulted into cyclic disasters associated with droughts and floods. The need to harvest flood water for mitigation of impacts thereof and improvement of storage has been underscored in this chapter.

Strategic Actions

- (a) Identification of priority areas for storage development/transfers.
- (b) Developing and marketing of feasibility/business plans to meet key storage needs.
- (c) Institution capacity developed to initiate storage infrastructure development.
- (d) Capacity enhancement on regulatory and water resource infrastructure development.
- (e) Supporting planning, design and implementation of disaster control measures.
- (f) Establishing effective mechanism for safety, operation and functioning of storage structures.

8. Strategy for Rights based approach and poverty reduction

This chapter identifies specific aspects within rights based approach and addresses how the rights based issues can be addressed through the process of developing the CMS and in the implementation of the same. Various cross cutting issues are considered for incorporation in water resource management strategies. These include:

- Human rights to water
- Water use conflict management
- Water use in poverty reduction
- Gender mainstreaming and
- HIV/AIDS

Strategic Actions

- (a) Giving priority to basic human needs in water allocation.
- (b) Capacity building for WRUA and gender balance in CAAC/WRUA.
- (c) Implementing work place HIV/AIDS policy.
- (d) Establishing complaint mechanism and capacity building of vulnerable groups in accessing water.

9. Strategy for water resources monitoring and information management

This chapter presents the strategy for ensuring that the water resources and the catchment monitoring systems provide accurate data. Further, it is necessary that the data is assessed and analyzed in a way that the information needed for catchment and water resource management is available, accurate and timely. As monitoring of water resources is a key element in the effective management of the resource, the need for immediate action through assessment of the monitoring stations and commencement of the rehabilitation works is emphasized in this section.

Strategic Actions

- (a) Developing an agreed framework for integrated catchment monitoring including abstraction surveys.
- (b) Implementing key water resources and catchment monitoring.
- (c) Developing a program of comprehensive water resources monitoring and information management.
- (d) Ensuring an effective monitoring network, comprehensive acquisition and application of water resources data.
- (e) Developing and implementing laboratory facilities for water quality monitoring including salt water intrusion.
- (f) Identifying information needs dissemination and exchange.
- (g) Training of staff and capacity building on monitoring and information management.

10. Financing and Implementation

This section present details regarding the WRMA approach to financing water resources management activities. It looks at both the financial needs of WRMA to implement its activities and the entire investment needs to ensure effective and sustainable water resources management development.

Strategic action

- (a) Developing a financial sustainability plan consistent with the water sector investment plan.
- (b) Developing a roll-out plan for water use charges.
- (c) Resources mobilization to support the implementation of the CMS at grassroots level.
